

Serban Tiganas is a Romanian architect who graduated in Bucharest and is currently based in Cluj-Napoca. He started his career by winning several architectural competitions. He founded Dico and Tiganas Architecture and Engineering, a multidisciplinary leading design office in Romania for more than 20 years. The projects of the office received several awards and were nominated, published and exposed internationally. He was also one of the founders of Planwerk Cluj, a Romanian – German planning office which started a new methodology for urbanism in Romania. His academic career brought in parallel to the practice the interest for temporary architecture, an approach towards sustainability, of which he based his PhD thesis. As a professor in the Technical University of Cluj-Napoca he is currently teaching theory and project design, recently adding a new course on communication and marketing for architects. He calls himself an activist for the profession and held different positions in the Romanian Order of Architects, including presidency 2010-2018, Architects Council of Europe and International Union of Architects. He is currently Secretary General of UIA.
